Cover Photo: Ceropegia digitiformis Kidyoo, a new species was discovered from northeastern Thailand. This perennial herb usually grows in moist, sandy soil or sandy rock substrate of semi-open mountain slopes or sandstone hills at the forest edges. In rainy season (May-October), these plants rapidly grow new leaves, above-ground stems and branches, then flower in August-September. During dry season (November-April), they lose all leaves and even the fleshy aerial stems, but underground storage organs survive. Their growth ceases until the next rainy season.
